Does Your Child Need Occupational Therapy?

Occupational Therapy

Facilitating and improving motor, sensory, and cognitive skills through meaningful activity!

Our Work is Child's Play

Occupational Therapy helps children who:

- Experience difficulty with performing self-care activities including dressing, buttoning a shirt and tying shoes.
- Demonstrate a feeding avoidance to specific textures or flavors of food/drink and may become frustrated, or gag/vomit when new foods are introduced.
- Dislikes or is bothered by tactile input, including not wanting to participate in “messy” activities or becoming frustrated with textures of clothing, tags, seams or when physical contact is given.
- Have difficulty with fine motor activities such as handwriting or cutting with scissors.
- Have difficulty initiating or completing tasks such as doing a simple puzzle, stringing beads or playing on the slide or swing.
- Experience problems in school with visual motor and visual perceptual activities such as copying from the board and completing assignments accurately.
- Have difficulty with cognitive tasks such as following instructions or classroom rules, problem solving, sequencing, patterning or organization.
- Have difficulty in social situations including interacting and playing appropriately with other children.
- Have problems with attention and levels of arousal.
- Experience clumsiness or have poor balance.
- Have difficulty tolerating changes in every day routine.
- Have tantrums and behaviors that are difficult to redirect or calm down.

If your child exhibits any of these problems or diagnosed with:

Autism ■ADHD ■Learning Disorders ■Developmental Delay ■Motor Impairment
